Biographical Sketch

Sadie Harber Adgent was born April 22, 1920 in Marshall County, Tennessee. She was the sixth of Jacob Edward and Leila Hopper Harber's nine children. She was raised in the Rich Creek, Anes Station, and Caney Spring communities of the county. Her parents were farmers as were at least three generations of her Harber, Hopper, Dwiggins, and Green ancestors, all in Marshall and the adjoining Bedford counties. She attended elementary school in Caney Spring and high school in Chapel Hill, graduating in 1943.

Between her graduation and first teaching position, Sadie worked at a sheet metal shop in Columbia, Tennessee, one of many "Rosie the Riveter" women who performed jobs previously done by men who left to serve in World War II. She taught grades 1-8 at Wilson School near Chapel Hill for the 1943-1944 school term, boarding with the Gene Hardison family who lived adjacent to the school. (The Hardisons lived on the same farm Sadie and her husband bought in 1951.) The following summer she worked in Lewisburg at Basham's Grocery, returning to teaching in September 1944, this time at Anes Station School near Lewisburg. With only nine pupils enrolled, the school closed shortly and Sadie returned to work at Basham's Grocery and moved to Lewisburg. From July 1945 through February 1947, she worked at Lewisburg's J.C. Penney store as bookkeeper and sales clerk. After leaving Penney's, she worked at Florence Stove Company in Lewisburg until she left in April 1949 to get married.

On April 15, 1949, Sadie married Sam Joe Adgent in Bell Buckle, Tennessee. Rev. Charles N. Barclay officiated. In 1951, they purchased 118 acres in the Wilson School / Lunn's Store community of Marshall County where they operated a dairy farm and raised tobacco, corn, sorghum, horses, hogs, chickens, apples, pears, peaches, and vegetables. Sadie taught first through sixth grades at Wilson School from 1956-1958. She was an active member of the Wilson Home Demonstration Club during the 1950s through 1970s. Her skill as a seamstress supplemented their farm income. For many years she worked at the Wilson School voting site on election days, verifying voter registration, and manually tallying votes.

The family belonged to Smyrna Baptist Church near Chapel Hill, Tennessee, which was located in a white frame building (no longer standing) across from what is now Henry Horton State Park golf course. Sadie taught various Sunday School and Vacation Bible School classes. She was frequently called upon to plan entertainment for church parties and she made many costumes for Christmas pageants. In 1997, she compiled the church's history for its 125th anniversary.

Scope and Content Note

The Sadie Harber Adgent Collection contains materials about Smyrna Baptist Church in Chapel Hill, Marshall County, Tennessee, its members, and other churches in the area. Two of the largest files contain information about the history of Smyrna Baptist Church, of which Henry Hollis Horton, governor of Tennessee from 1927 to 1933, was a member. Included in the collection is scrapbook information compiled by Sadie Adgent, Vacation Bible School certificates for Adgent and her daughter Nancy, and church bulletins from Smyrna Baptist Church that range from 1944 to 1999. The Sadie Harber Adgent Collection contributes to resources on local church life in Tennessee in the mid twentieth century.
